Psychodrama techniques in the treatment of adult children of alcoholics

SUMMARY

Psychodrama according to Moreno is applied in the treatment of various mental disorders. In recent years numerous psychodrama techniques have turned out to be useful also in the treatment of adults, whose development and functioning in adult life was negatively affected by their parents' alcoholism. Characteristics of the family with the alcohol problem include chaos, inconsequence, feelings of tension and shame, as well as the central position of alcohol. A child's needs and feelings are definitely less important than these of his/her alcoholic parent are. Family members work out their own ways of adjustment in order to keep the family together as a whole. The alcoholic family system is closed and ruled by such principles as: do not trust, do not feel, and do not talk about the real problem. The child reared in a family of this type is lacking spontaneity, cheerfulness and ability to play, and often is incapable of expressing emotions. Psychodrama techniques allow the patient to recognize the alcohol problem in the family, ventilate alcohol-related emotions, change attitudes acquired in the childhood, and practice new behaviors. Psychodrama helps adult children of alcoholics to find their identity, their place in life, and facilitates their emotional, intellectual, physical and spiritual recovery.
